STATE HEALTH
There are many doctors, in many towns in British Columbia who are not the pinch of the depression. It is the case in the larger cities, where the profession is over-crowded. Here, it is said, even specialists are having a time.

An official of the Toronto Association of Medical Officers recently claimed that many doctors were on the verge of bankruptcy, and that unless the municipalities were willing to bear the cost of medical services of those who are without funds, state medicine would have to be established.

This medico suggested that all persons with an income of less than $2,000 be registered, and that panels of 800 persons be assigned to each general practitioner.

Money to pay practitioners will be raised by a per capita tax on the community, similar to that for police protection and the public schools.

This idea is being put to a practical test in Ontario, in the counties of Peel, Grey, and Huron. Dr. Prescott and Russell. The work is being carried on with the assistance of medical men and dentists. If the experiment is successful, it will, according to Dr. J. M. Robb, minister of health, be extended to the province.

Everyone is entitled to the best medical attention that can be obtained. There should be no discrepancy made in this instance between the rich and the poor. The physician, with healing, Alhambra knows no class.

If state medicine is designed to eliminate just this end, it will be a great step forward in our contemporary civilization.

State doctors should be made available to all. If the well-to-do have no wish to avail themselves of such a service, that would be their privilege. But they should have the opportunity of refusal, and should bear their share of the cost of upkeep.

WORLD OPINION

The question of the future of the world, do not necessarily carry the endorsement of the London Free Press.

WHAT ARE PRISONS FOR?

Most disputes on methods of prison administration seem to originate in basic confusion as to the purpose of imprisonment. What are prisons for? Some persons, like the Alabama justice who declared recently that modern penal institutions are too comfortable, might answer that prison is to punish criminals and make examples of them.

Those accepting this premise may conclude that all humane improvements should be discarded in favor of the old-time dark cell, bread-and-water diet, and naked chamber. Any other group might hold that the main object of prisons is the segregation of offenders from the society upon which they prey. Still a third class would insist that the purpose of prison is to reform the criminal and return him to the world a re-constructed and useful individual.

Until civilization makes up its mind which one of these ends we put people in prison for, purpose of punishment, or for the purpose to be employed. In the past too little thought has been given to the subject, but it has been taken for granted by many that prison was primarily for punishment and secondarily for segregation. By the way, the case is down brutality, hard methods used against hard men made them harder still. As always, Beelzebub failed to cast out Beelzebub.

Today, as never before, an entirely different attitude is developing toward society's offenders. Instead of aiming to inflict profitless suffering upon the unfortunate who have erred, modern warden try to help them by giving them another chance.

Prisons are becoming more and more educational institutions where crime—mental mistakes, that is—is corrected by mental means. Ages of prison history written in human suffering have failed to exterminate wrongdoing. Perhaps one reason for the failure lay in not recognizing that crime is mental and cannot be corrected by physical chastisement, but by appeal to the heart and mind. This does not mean pampering; it means sympathy, discipline. But it involves a treatment which the prisoner, if he is honest with himself, will acknowledge is just.

Revenge has not abolished crime. Different attitude that society is turning toward a day when an opposite system may be used. That system will stand or fall, not on such details as whether prisoners have libraries, radios, and clubs, nor on whether their point of view is changed when they emerge from supervision. Physical privation has had its chance. One more method yet remains to be tried, that method which Paul said "never fail"—Christian Science Monitor.

STATE LOTTERIES

Mr. Arthur Fichardt has been pleading before the Provincial Commission for a system of state lotteries as the best means of restoring the provincial finances and no doubt he will receive a good deal of indiscriminate support. For individually, every citizen would probably like to see a state system of lotteries which would give him at intervals during the year at least a chance of securing a large unearned fortune. That is only human nature. But... the scheme would introduce into South Africa as a state affair a system that would seriously impair habits of thrift and would spread throughout the population a feverish anxiety about the "draw". Every month a large part of the population of the Union would be awaiting anxiously the result of the draw. The state lottery would in fact, create a national habit of a most pernicious kind. And, presumably, if the state once undertakes the business we should have, as some foreign countries have, a network of lottery tents in state pay, who would swarm over the countryside, and create a public nuisance. We should be producing within a few years boys and girls with no other thought in their heads than getting rich quick—without doing honest work. Already in South Africa there are more than sufficient inducements for the satisfaction of the gambling instinct that most of us have in greater or less degree, but when once the state gets to work deliberately to stimulate the get-rich-quick idea, we shall be permanently undermining the national character, and by a most insidious process—Cape Town (S.A.) "Post-War Currie"
By T. A. Barnard

The writer has just received by mail a copy of an address Sir Arthur Currie had prepared to deliver at Toronto on Remembrance Day, Nov. 11, last.

This address has prompted me to write a few lines regarding some of his activities since the war. Much has been said and written about Sir Arthur since his regrettable death, most of this paying tribute to him as a very able and gallant soldier. About this there is no question, but we want to say a few words, and thereby pay tribute to his post war activities, particularly to his great efforts on behalf of peace.

General Currie, like his eminent colleague, the late Field Marshal Sir William Robertson, realized the utility of war in settling international problems, and freely gave of his time, prestige and ability in the advocacy of peace.

Coming back from the war with all the prestige that goes to a successful General, with the choice of the highest military position in the gift of the Government at his disposal, he chose as his post-war vocation a responsible position in one of the most important steps of learning, not only on this continent but of the whole world, and continued as Principal of McGill University till his death.

He early became actively associated with the Canadian Branch of the League of Nations, and associated himself with the late Sir Douglas Haig in an endeavour to organize all Canadian ex-servicemen into one great organization known as the Canadian Legion, and it probably was his outstanding message, sent from a sick-bed, to the National Convention of the Legion at Regina in 1929 that brought him to the front as an outstanding advocate of peace.

Twofold Advocacy

This message had a twofold advocacy. First, our duty to take care of those suffering as a result of their war service, and secondly urged those that had taken part in the last war were urged to do all possible to prevent another such catastrophe.

Returning to Canada after his world tour in search of health and knowledge, he addressed the members of the provincial executive of the Legion in Vancouver. It was at this small gathering that I met and heard Currie, the post-war man, the man of peace.

In September 1931 he contributed an outstanding article on disarmament in the Interdependence. We give excerpts from that article here.

"One of the dearest hopes of the men who fought in the Great War was that their efforts, if victorious, would put an end to all war. I do not know how many of the men who controlled the destinies of Europe entertained such hopes, but I do know that thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of citizens sacrificed their happiness, their health, their fortunes and even their lives in the hopes of winning peace for their children and for generations yet unborn.

"So far as its aim was the establishment of permanent peace, the Great War, completely failed. It failed because the governments of the world betrayed their trust in the first place the victors imposed upon the vanquished a treaty which was sure to create, and has created, endless friction and trouble. Then to guard against the dangers they had brought about and which they must have foreseen, they began building up new armaments, and despite all high sounding phrases and international pacts, the armed forces of land, sea and air are yet more formidable in 1931 than those of 1914.

End of Civilization

"If disarmament fails, that is, if it does not ensure an honest and universal reduction in the actual killing and wounding power of arms, we shall see the downfall of our institutions and the end of western civilization. Let me report that disarmament must be honest, must be mutual and must be universal. I appeal to the veterans of the Great War, to the youth of the world, to let it be that your governments determine on disarmament now for there will be no other chance."

If space permitted I would like to fill address for last Remembrance Day (prepared but read by another) published but can only take some of salient points, as follows:

"After fifteen years of the promised new world we were told to fight to create, the puzzled question it tacitly conveyed is still unanswered. The war and its aftermath are still with us, more terrible than 15 years ago. That is the simple truth, the confession which today brings its shame.

"Has the world, with our country in the 15 years since the Armistice, kept its promised faith with the unreturning dead? Has the great sacrifice really turned to glory? The glory of a better time. Has the world done anything more in these 15 years than to service to the ideal for which our fallen comrades gave their lives?

"The answer to these questions is found in the actual conditions of the hour.

Just and Lasting Peace

Returned men are called upon today as never before to aid every movement to establish a just and

CHAPTER I THE PROFESSOR AND THE BOUNCER

A seely looking gentleman of the old school approached the free lunch counter in the speakeasy bar and eyed the cheese, crackers, salami and beer with a professional air. He looked his cane over the counter, and made himself a sandwich of liverwurst and crackers. He ate it hungrily and was putting out his hand for more crackers when the bar-tender's warning voice arrested him.

"Hi there, Professor."

"There was no welcome, in the glance that met the Professor's eyes, and the gentleman of the old school picked up his gloves and cane and walked slowly back of the men lined up at the bar, examining faces keenly, looking for a friendly nod and a nod to a drink. He stopped back of a slightly intoxicated man who was saying to his companion:

"They got some pretty good heavy come along. I was at the Garden the other night and there was a fall in the semi-circular."

The Professor pushed his way in between the two convivial men.

"Ah, gentlemen, we meet again!" He gave an order to the barkeeper and a glance at the men.

"You're my boy. You get a hundred dollars for a little easy sparring next Friday night."

"How much of it do you get?"

"As your manager I retain fifty—no, forty dollars. What do you say?"

"Well..."

The speakeasy proprietor bustled up. "Say, I told you to empty those spots from the bar! Go and do it now!"

"The bouncer stood grinning at him."

"Did you hear what I said?"

The bouncer reached for his hat and coat. "You mean 'em, Tony. I'll grow mushrooms!" He followed the Professor out of the bar.

"So I get sixty bucks. There's no catch in this, is there, Uncle?"

"Way of course not! All you have to do is..."

"Search me. I haven't moved faster than a walk for months."

"Well, ah, perhaps we better do a little rowdy."

"What's your name, Uncle?"

"Bennett. Edwin J. Bennett. My intimates call me Professor."

"Morgan—good ring name, that." So Steve Morgan left off speaking-bouncing to become a prizefighter.

"It was crack of dawn. Along a Long Island country road a Ford car was ambushed at its side trotted Steve Morgan, dressed in old dungarees and a sweater."

"Did that, young Gaffney..."

"Puffed Steve, 'have to do... this morning stuff!'"

"Am, my boy, Gaffney trained me, mightily. He was ten miles and an antelope! Skipped the rope like a flycatcher."

"Well, it looks like after Friday night young Morgan is going to change his profession, this."

The Professor took one hand from the wheel of the Ford, drew a bottle from his pocket and raised it as a toast to the quarrelers and said quietly:

"Hey, boys, this isn't a broad, cutting station. Turn off the loud-speakers."

"Gawn! Scram!" said one of the men, while the other fellow started toward the bouncer.

"Who asked you to put your big frying pan into..."

The bouncer's fist landed on the jaw of the first "monkey," flooring him. He came back with an uppercut which laid the second "monkey" out cold. He picked up one of the men by the shirt front, the other by the coat collar and dragged them off into the lobby.

"Here, Joe, throw 'em the rest of the way. Wait a second!"

"There's a prospect, Professor," said one of his listeners, but the speaker abruptly left the table without reply.

"Look up the bouncer, had resumed jostling legs into the cellar, and watched the ease with which he handled them."

"What's the matter, Uncle?" grunted the bouncer.

"You're new here, aren't you?" How long have you been in New York?"

"About three weeks."

"Where were you before that?"

"Australia—then Singapore."

"Oh, a sailor, eh? What did you do in Singapore?"

"In the parlor of a joint. Threw out the drinks and kept damn from kissing each other."

WALES WON BET ON HIS TARTAN

Autographed One Pound Note Draws Tidy Sale Price For Legion

London, Dec. 7.—A one-pound note autographed by the Prince of Wales and General Sir Ian Hamilton—it was the amount bet between them—has been purchased by a Glasgow man for a sum which runs into three figures.

Describing the incident, General Sir Ian Hamilton said a bet was made between the Prince and himself. "Before the Prince went to Rothesay in August," he said, "I had the temerity to express the opinion that the tartan to be worn by the Prince as Duke of Rothesay was a red tartan. Nobody had ever seen it, as it was so long since a Duke of Rothesay had visited the Fifth of Clyde Island."

"I turned out that I was wrong," continued Sir Ian, "for the Prince appeared in a beautiful green and purple. When I saw that I pulled out a one-pound note and handed it over to the Prince. Thereupon the Prince smiled and handed over the note to the treasurer of the British Legion, after he had decided to dispose of it in aid of the Legion funds."

The purchaser of the note wished to remain anonymous and did not desire to divulge the amount paid. "It was a very handsome sum," added Sir Ian.

Nanaimo Rugby Team To Play Marpole XV.

The local rugby squad will journey to Vancouver Saturday to engage Marpole in a league game.

Dawkin, Neen and Johnny Easterbrook have been selected to play again, having recovered from injuries.

Marpole played Nanaimo to a draw here in the first round, and Saturday's tilt should prove a tough game. The following players will represent Nanaimo: Full back, J. Easterbrook; three-quarters, Mason, Neen, W. Easterbrook and Hynek; half-backs, Aitken, Huddleston; forwards, Dullin, Blackburn, Collishaw, Shaw, Fulk, Dobson, Taylor, Bamford. Reserves, Kerr and Hirsley.

Juniors, Seniors To Play Benefit Match

The Nanaimo Christmas Cheer Fund is expected to benefit materially from a match between the Nanaimo City senior eleven and the fast stepping junior pace-letters, Motor Levels, which is scheduled to be played a week from Sunday if the necessary permission is granted by the Mechanics by the B. C. J. F. A.

Such keen competition has not existed between the Seniors and Juniors here for years, and the Motor Levels' fast pace this season has caused a great deal of street-corner talk about their ability. Many fans wish to see a match between them and the Nanaimo senior eleven.

Christmas Bazaar Many former pupils rallied to assist their Alma Mater and help carry on the good work done by the Sisters.

The Ladies' Auxiliary and young ladies of St. Ann's Guild rendered valuable assistance to the Sister Superior in bringing to a successful conclusion this well planned work.

Many weeks had been spent in preparing for this annual event. Mrs. J. Edge-Parsons, the president of the Auxiliary, convened the bazaar assisted by many hard-working ladies.

The first prize for the grand drawing was a beautifully polished red cedar chest, filled with articles worked and donated by the Sisters. Many other articles were also the work of Sisters and pupils.

HIS OWN MEDICINE

Southern Editor Fined As a Drunk, Prints All Details

Rockingham, N. C., Dec. 6.—Scott M. Thomas, editor of the Richmond County Journal, published his own account of being arrested for being drunk in this week's edition of his paper.

Appearing on the front page under a double column head, the story said: "Scott M. Thomas, dry co-editor of the Richmond County Journal, moved South Carolina, came liquor with Pennsylvania beer, drank too much of both and landed in jail here a few minutes after midnight Saturday."

"He remained incarcerated two hours, being bailed out by a friend at 2 a.m. Sunday. In Mayor's court yesterday he was taxed with the costs, $6.85."

"An editor who won't put his own misfortune in print has no right to publish others'."

Yacht Yankee May Race As Defender

New York, Dec. 7.—A strong probability that the Yankee, one of the four yachts which contended for the post as the America's Cup defender in 1930, will again race in the trials, next summer was seen today when it was learned that plans were under way to refit the yacht to conform to the new conditions of the international race.

Although the applicant which plans to purchase the Yankee has not been completed, it is understood that Chandler Hovey of Boston, one of the original owners of the sloop, is one of the group which plans to race the Yankee next summer.

Farmers Would Have Quiz Into Taxation of Rural Schools

Victoria, Dec. 7.—The annual meeting of the Vancouver Island and Gulf Island Districts of Farmers Institutes opened today. The meeting called on the Department of Education for investigation into taxation for school purposes, claiming unfair discrimination between land owners, and non-land owners.

A reduction for automobile licenses for Sayward district farmers on the grounds they only had 15 miles of road, was recommended. A continuation on Vancouver Island of the existing $10 cougar bounty is favored.

Threatening the onlookers with the pistol, the slayer backed toward an exit and fled.

High School Pupils Plan Yuletide Dance

The annual Christmas dance given by the staff and students of the High School has become an institution. Pupils and teachers are working hard on preparations, and they hope that this year, as in previous years, the dance will be an outstanding success. It is the aim of the school that each year this function shall be one of the best organized and most enjoyable of the year's social events. It is the occasion on which the High School entertains its friends, and every effort is used to provide the very best. This year, besides the favor of support, a new departure is being made. There will be given before the dance starts a series of skits and musical numbers which it is hoped will add variety and enjoyment.

Invitations may be obtained through Mrs. G. B. Clarke of the school staff.

The event is not a money-raising affair. All that is necessary is that it pay its way, since the school is without funds to make good any deficit. It is hoped that friends and parents will turn out and enjoy the dance and the entertainment.
