

T: OK, I'm Al Thorne with the Mid-Island Vintage Tractor and Equipment Club. We're here at the fair celebrating 150 years. We like to preserve the old stuff, to show it to the younger generations. A lot of people think that you used to go to the sink and turn the tap on and there was always water there. It's not the case. You know, you had to go and pump water by hand or mechanized equipment to make life easier. Same with electrical. You know everybody thinks that you just went to the wall and turned the switch and you had lights. Not true. You know, you sometimes had to generate your own power. Different things like that. So we're kind of working with equipment that was meant to try to make life easier for people. You know, the old washing machines, the old engines, the old tractors. And here we are. We're just showing it so people know that it's all about.
