

K: When I was young, in elementary school, we're taught to be proud to be Canadian. I was always so proud to be a Canadian growing up, because we were told that we were supposed to be. It's a great place to live. It's full of trees and mountains and rivers and streams. There's not too many people. It's very, not very densely populated areas, so that's great. And we, at that time, weren't involved in tons of wars and stuff like that. But then, you start to get more educated and you learn more and more as you get older. And then you start to realize that there's not that many reasons to be too excited about being Canadian. You are pretty much just like every other country that has ever existed. You probably stole it from someone else and, like we have here. Yeah, I don't know. We're just like everybody else here. We just are a younger country and don't have quite as much history as other nations so long. I don't know. I think Canada has a lot of work ahead of them if they really wanna be a place that people can be proud of. I'm not saying that we're that bad, I just think that they play us up a bit more than we deserve. They are only just now starting to recognize the damage that they did to the First Nations people that they stole this land from. And they're only starting now to reconcile that. And I think they have a lot of work to do. I think that's it, how much time?

I: You're good.

K: Good? Alright.
